CLASSROOM

LIBRARY AND LANGUAGE LAB

FACULTY

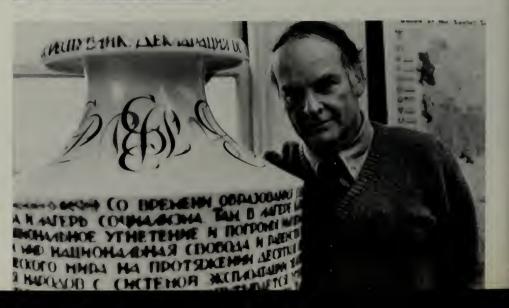

Samuel Phillips once said "Goodness without knowledge is good and knowledge without goodness is dangerous — it is the combination of the two, knowlege and goodness combined together that make for the soundest possible character." It is with this in mind that the PA faculty sets out each year to educate the "youth of all quarters." The job of the faculty has come down through the years from "forming the morals and minds of youth" to teaching, coaching, advising, and bursting, etc . . . ((All of the above, however, is based on the PA faculty having sound mind and character of its own.)

Fortunately, for all of us there are those faculty whom we like and dislike, frown upon and smile at, think should be in a nuthouse and those whose memories we hope to cherish forever. It shouldn't be any other way. It is those "unfriendly" faculty members that make the moments with the "enjoyable" ones better. It is the boring 9:00 Science lecture that makes the 10:00 History class seem like heaven. It is this way with faculty. It is this way with friends.

It is probably the diversity within PA's faculty that makes it special. Not only are there the boring and exciting, the smart and the not so smart, the tall and the short, the stern and the cordial, but, more importantly there are the ones that make the PA experience memorable.

Each year, like the student body, the faculty goes through a metamorphosis. There will always be the Old guard — Regan, Allis, etc . . . — that keeps the body solid. But there is also the new blood that keeps the body diverse and fresh. Each year PA sees young faculty and Teaching Fellows pass through, leaving their mark on the school. It is the combination of old and young, in both age and ideas, that keeps PA's faculty a challenge for students.

The relationship between students and faculty at any institution is usually thought of as a conflict. As Reverend Blain would say "This conflict between age and youth can never be resolved, only dealt with." However, at PA the relationship between faculty and students is more a meeting of separate bodies, whose aim is the growth of youth. The faculty along with their life at home is responsible for helping adolescence become something other than adolescence. This seems difficult. Yet each year the Senior class leaves somewhat mature and grown and educated, not very much like what they were as Juniors. So it is the growth and the challenge, the good and the bad moments and the unique feelings that each student has that make up the relationship between faculty and students here.

This year PA has said hello and goodbye to many of its faculty. We have welcomed Petey and Lou and Phil, as well as the triumvirate in the chapel — Reverend Zaeder, Father Hennigan and Rabbi Gendler. We have said goodbye to Jake and Mr. Sorota and Goody — perhaps PA will miss him the most. This transcience must be expected.

So it is with all this in mind that the students and faculty look towards each other every year. At times it seemed that the faculty was after the students and vice-versa. At times it seemed that students and faculty lost touch of each other . . . But in the long run, as we look through this book years from now, it will be the enjoyable moments, the moments of growth between students and faculty that will linger in our minds . . .

MUSIC

This year's Music has been very satisfying for all those involved. The abundance of performances and the attendance thereof have been surprising and pleasing. All the regular musical organizations have been augmented by many student organized groups, all of which have been received with enthusiasm and interest. Godspell, the Folk Festival, and Gilbert and Sullivan were all completely student run as far as music is concerned. The attitude of a somewhat cliqueish nature which has prevailed in the past years was mutated into a more universal acceptance that inagurated the concern of a variety of persons, who would previously have been discouraged to perform.

Performers have had more concern with the outcome of their rehearsal than with the aesthetics of the rehearsal and its process. Thus the results have been more acceptable and more encouraging. This attitude has transgressed, therefore, to those less apt in technical ability to complete a project which would encourage further improvement.

Both the orchestra and the chorus have been blessed with a score of fine and interested musicians who have commenced a tradition fine concerts. The band seems to have been marked with a lack of interest, although the individual players were on the whole very good, and have spent their efforts on such specialized groups as the jazz band and brass ensemble, which both have had fine records . . .

Through the efforts of many students, coffee houses have again found a place in the weekly social entertainment. They have involved many different styles and performers, and have stimulated the involvement of many different students. These performances have been augmented by frequent Fidelio and chamber music concerts.

Because of this diversity of talent and interest, both the music department and the students have enjoyed a successful and enjoyable year. Not only has the school's outside music reputation been heightened through the efforts of the Cantata Singers' and Godspell's tours of Great Britain, but the contentedness of the school itself has been intensified. Now people involved in music are not just labeled "musicians" and left at that, but are respected for their efforts and their performance. - Tom Lloyd

CROSS COUNTRY

Cross-country: to those who viewed it from the outside it meant a bunch of half-crazed lunatics who stole soccer balls and growled menacingly at football teams. What the outsider didn't see were the hot dusty summer miles, and the cold quarters in late October. The fun and games displayed the bonds of desire, genuine affection, and the striving for the common goal created by days, weeks and years of work. Those bonds made the team of 1977. Together we suffered setbacks, injuries and defeats finishing the season as we had begun, together.

The team consisted of all the old students. Some began the fall burdened with maintaining the previous year's unbeaten record, others were out to prove that although new, they were up to the challenge. Challenge it was, as a four win, four loss record proves. The challenge was met, the trials survived and conquered, and we emerged winners. Congratulations to all.

ORIENTATION REGISTRATION

Is this really Phillips Academy? Did I choose to attend a country club for the next year? Surely the Andover pace must be more demanding than climbing Den Rock, playing trust in the Sanctuary, trying to act on the G.W. stage, or doodling a picture of my hometown in the Art Center. I also wondered if the atmosphere of the Andover school year would be as, well, hilarious as the first Blue Key Advisor and dormitory meeting. Unfortunately, the overwhelming answer of Academics came too soon for my liking.

— Dan Jacobsen

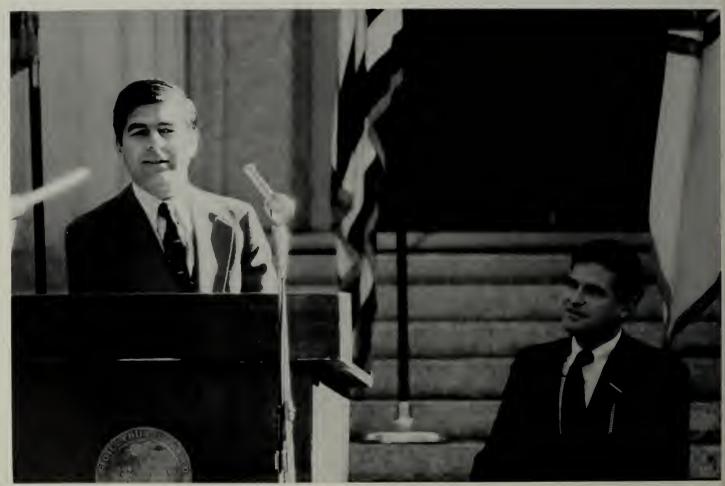

DUKAKIS VISIT

Bicentennial festivities ignited with a bit of a dud, in the less than impressive Andover stop-over of Governor Michael Dukakis' hectic itinerary. To the disillusionment of over-expectant students, faculty and town officials, the Governor elaborated on the virtues of public service for students and Academy alike.

EXETER WEEKEND

It began with the pranks. Lacking the spontanaiety and controversy of recent years, they regardlessly served to preserve and inflate the sacred cow of the annual prank. Duly stamped, signed, and approved by Headmaster Sizer, a band of Andover patriots systematically descended upon the Exeter campus, armed with propagandist balloons and an hilarious parody of the EXONIAN. After riddling the community with this potent ammunition, the mob escaped practically unscathed, courageously eluding some near-disastrous encounters. At the pep rally the smell of imminent victory pervaded our passions.

We awoke, exhilarated and prepared for the chief invasion of Exeter. Equipped with all the ingredients for ultimate victory, we set out for Exeter, 650 strong, exhaling the fierceness of a Mongrel horde. Storming across the vast plains of Exeter, we felt our power mounting, expanding, threatening to explode.

The opening kickoff was into a brisk November breeze, and the massive PA following came to life. With the realization that we were really in the game, and that, yes, our previously undistinguished football team was really ahead by fourteen points, the mood changed from tense concentration to reckless jubilation. We cheered anything, from an Exeter fumble to a completed Andover pass to the costumed PA ape stamping out his glee. The underdog squad of retiring Coach Sorota demonstrated expertise unfathomable to the screaming masses, exemplified by the brilliant performances of Jim Acheson and quarterback Steve Ewanouski, among others. The fourth quarter was euphoric ecstasy: the game had been decided and we could rejoice with confidence.

The ultimate victory, now a reality, we floated back to the buses; reassured, happy. We would have Monday off, we hopefully told ourselves. All attention was diverted to that evening's concert by McCoy Tyner.

The line began to form outside GW a full 45 minutes before the doors opened, and it became clear that this was more than just One More Saturday Night. High spirits carried the crowd into its seats and everyone anxiously awaited McCoy Tyner's appearance. The concert was far from a letdown, as the band's soaring keyboard improvisation and frenzied rythmic intricacies hypnotized the hard-to-please audience. But the concert ended too soon and the masses straggled back to their dorms, content with the day's activities.

SPRING CONCERT

CONSTITUTION DAY

Constitution Day was a Bicentennial treat. The cage provided more than ample space for what appeared to be literally all of Andover, gathered to rededicate and sign the new charter of the P.A. Constitution.

Also featured was the Alfred E. Stearns lecture this year delivered by Exeter's headmaster Steve Kurtz. To the discomfort of collared necks and rumpled skirts, his topic unfortunately spanned the Federalist period of the Academy's history.

THE BICENTENNIAL!

Those of us who were lucky enough to have made it through this far, past the busts and past that chronic sadness that seems to plague the PA student, especially during the long winters, were lucky enough to be in the Celebration. It seems that the activities were designed for the alumni and that we were mere exhibits. Those of us who delighted in being stuffed poodles, delighted in carting antique fire engines and trundling down Main street . . . But of course some of us, me included, didn't want to have any part of this Exhibition; we wanted celebration in the true sense of the word . . . Some of us cut our required celebration work activity; cut our car duty in the midst of the soaking, drenching rain of Saturday, forgot fireworks duty quite conveniently, and engaged in the most monumental forgotten weekend benge that PA has ever seen . . . Few of us will forget the open bar in the Andover Inn on Thursday, which was opened expressively for the Calvinist 'Old Guard,' but which through the good nature of John the bartender, known to many of us of lounge initiation ceremonies, was opened for all two hundred years of PA degenerates. Many of us wandered about that packed lounge reeling about and about, being constantly stuck to walls, ceilings, and floors trying to find the bad influences of our school days. These once-known personalities wandered about as ghosts searching for parties and perhaps a refuge from the harsh world outside.

The bicentennial was sort of a convention of conventions. There was a convention of forty-thousand headmen exhibiting their fuzzy demeanor, there was the phalanx of rainbow-hued lawyers covorting about with their friends the doctors, with whom they discussed quite good-humoredly accident cases, by the way what is the best way to cure whiplash? There were the certificates of attendance who praised their fellows who had been lucky enough to be signed by the big league. And of course, there were the nomadic tribe of the Forgotten, those poor souls who flashed their little alumni tags in a vain effort of self-protection.

The Bicentennial was, in some sense a family reunion, upon a warm New England hearth, drinking beer and spreading family cheer. In fact, some of the Administration dared to compare it with Christmas. But we all know that the Belltower is not situated in sunny Babel, but in the often cloudy domain of Main street . . . And though there was a great deal of confusion spread during the Celebration, none of the participants felt to any extent that they were in the Hollywood production of the Ten Commandments. And no one, not even the Indian girl at the station wearing red sneakers, compared themselves to Charleton Heston. As we all know, only Jack Lemmon and Humphrey Bogart went here. The Bazaar was the most effluent, if not the most exciting aspect of the Celebration. Remember the vivacious peddlers selling ice cream and Scriblerus. Remember the old ladies selling cookbooks and the C&W stars auctioning off ancient junk. Remember the doused underclassmen falling from one stall to the other, murmuring their mantra, "sex and drugs and rock and roll." And no one will ever forget the massive constructions, built to last two days, that graced the Vista from which we would soon receive our diplomas. There was that graceful geodisic dome, relegated to tetherball, which resembled one unnamed teacher's balding head. Perhaps the school decided to erect a symbol of intellectualism further down the Vista from the Cochran erection of Sam Phil. And those of the alumni, disgruntled in their attempt to find a restroom, were heard to remark that the tents should be blue and white, not green and white.

The Celebration was as one of the Lit-C teachers was heard to remark, "an event planned by fools, celebrating nothing." But we were glad for this one last time-out in our perpetual game of Nazi-tag with the faculty. No matter, that the Convocation was boring, the parade stuffy, the fireworks drenching—the Celebration was one of the largest damn parties that this headman ever rolled into.

BEACH TRIP

On one of those last weekends of September, just as summer tans were fading, and we realized the year was actually underway, we gathered behind commons for the now traditional Senior Beach Trip. For the first time, outside of College Counseling meetings and Arena Days, we all had a chance to look around and see what the class of '78 actually looked like. Think of it: right there in the back of commons, where Fat Ernie dumps the garbage and Johnny the Crazy Man parks his car, the diverse wardrobes, hair lengths, and ethos of the Bicentennial Class were symbolically unified.

The busses unloaded at Crane's beach almost within view of the water, and there was a near explosion of euphoria. Like Teddy Roosovelt at San Juan Hill, Stephanie Bennett led a mad charge onto the beach, where the once mature inhabitants of a prestigious Secondary School wasted no time in amusing themselves with a myriad of acts of seeming insanity. Kirk Dogget spearheaded a small but virile group of bathers, while Matt Palmieri dreamed forlornly of Malibu. Meg Carley, draped in kelp, was named Slime Queen, while Shady Hartshorne struck up amicable (if slightly sarcastic) conversation with an unsuspecting beach-comber looking for coins with a metal detector. Frisbees flew, cameras clicked, and grins grinned.

While jocks and pseudo-jocks battled it out in volleyball, others wandered down the beach and over dunes, inspecting flotsam and jetsam and surreptitiously sampling contraband.

Although Bobo Clark optimistically brought his Cocoanut Tanning Oil, the afternoon remained chilly. A fire was built, and soon everyone was there, listening to a guitar that somehow appeared and was passed around, and cheering on Bruce Thompson as he made a valient attempt to feed us all with English Muffins toasted on a stick. There was some jockeying for the coveted positions on the windward side of the fire, while others opted for mass body warmth on an overlooking dune. Before we could enjoy the beach and ourselves (Right! It seems to me that we returned to school early because of the cold. BRT), we were headed back to Commons, sandy, cold, exhilarated and looking forward to the first week of Senior Tea.

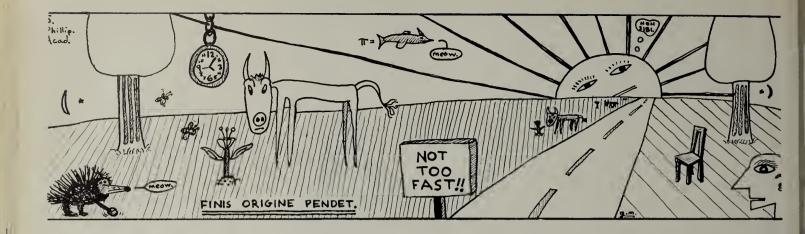

SENIOR TEA

SCHOOL YEAR ABROAD

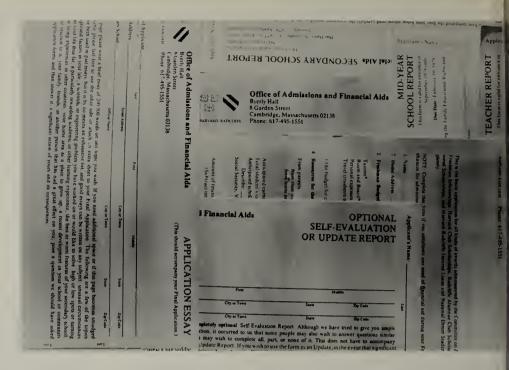

FOUR MORE YEARS

The first thing that strikes a new senior is soon he or she will have to sell themselves to a college. Successfully! Here, the thought of the application process is melded with the concept of college counselling. With this in mind, the P.A. senior prepares himself for more organization than he will have ever before encountered. There are college counselling meetings and personal meetings to avoid forgetting. Applications need to be filled out and Black Monday looms in the distance. It's damned confusing.

College counselling meetings started last spring of upper year and proved to be boring then. This year's round could not be much better. Sure, you can listen and catch a lot of information that will save mistakes. But the atmosphere is conducive to a distracted audience. Instead of the speaker one is concerned with straight-backed chairs with just enough leather padding to remind you what a comfortable chair feels like but not enough to permit one to be imagined. Attention is drawn by the sticky stuff on the floor that makes a tearing noise when everybody desperately shifts their feet looking for dry floor space. People study the confusing wall patterns and wood scroll work not to mention the amusing and wondrous stains that cover the ceiling and walls. Indeed, it is a measure of personal fortitude whether or not one pays attention. Fortitude would be a good thing to have though. There are a deluge of little things to know. Do you put your home or school address on applications? Do you request personal interviews by phone or mail? When asked to describe your most strengthening personal experience should you be truthful and relate the story of when you were busted for smoking pot? How do you deal with parental signatures on applications when your 'rents are in Communist China? The meetings, no matter how mundane, keep everyone abreast of this. It's up to the senior to catch it all.

The senior is also soon to see the inside of his counsellor's office, with the counsellor also there and staring at him from across a desk. Quite a prodigious desk too. Covered with personal files, your file among them. Oh he knows. Yes, he knows exactly what credentials you have. What you've been caught doing wrong. What you've been seen doing right. These counsellors are difficult ones to snow. "You want to go to Harvard?! Ha! You've been on Probation twice, you have a 3.5 average don't participate in athletics or extra-curriculars, and are currently on restriction. How about Syracuse?" And for a few . . ." UVM? Well gee, you've got a 5.5 average, are president of the model railroad club, have never been in trouble, and have two varsity letters. Why not at least look at Harvard? You've got a good shot at Princeton and Yale too.' Armed with only a notebook and pen, a senior has to face a counsellor who puts no stock in chance and has a big desk covered with personal files. Still, these personal meetings teach you a great deal. When applying for a job somewhere in the future, a P.A. grad will have to look hard to find an interviewer as intimidating as Robin Crawford.

Arrrgh! Wrestling with applications is just the thing to frustrate anyone during Christmas. Unless you applied Early Action in which case you are completely frazzeled during vacation waiting for decisions. It is not so simple to write several personal essays. They also cannot be interchanged. Skidmore asks you to express your views on penguin pollution in the antarctic. Swathmore wants to know about your trip to Lowell last summer. Bitchmore wants to know you better. The senior must inform each school of his Social Security number, mailing address, full name, hat size, and father's occupation in octupulate. He must list his extra-curriculars, sports, likes, dislikes, and cosmic bummers. The stuff some colleges want to know and the number of times they want to know it can make a senior go bald by Spring Term. But applications are not the end.

The "end" is a many-faceted thing. It is exhilarating, crushing, solemn, gay, good, and bad. It's a bunch of seniors who check their mailboxes every five minutes for all of Black Monday. Each quite anxious, despite what they wish others and themselves to think. The "end" is a new opening for some. It is a numbing setback for others. It is a surprise for one and no surprise for another. It is a hell of a party. It is also a complete shattering of hopes. The only practical to deal with Black Monday is not to take it wholly seriously. That is quite impossible, though. The energy that radiates from each senior and the class as a whole is singing. A conversational tone of voice is abandoned. Everyone speaks in shouts, squeals, and sobs. And people don't walk, they run. However, Black Monday ends too. Then only the waitlist candidates are still tense. But even they hold only a very lame worry. At this point, only graduation on the horizon makes any difference anymore.

BLACK MONDAY

Dr. Sizer bowed to student demands for the extension of Senior Tea the morning of college acceptances. Unphased by such additions, College Counselor Robert Crawford reputedly commented: "This was one of the worst years in recent P.A. history." Results, nevertheless, were anxiously awaited, and for most brought news of four more years of secure higher learning.

A thousand doors ago when I was a lonely kid in a big house with four garages and it was summer as long as I can remember, I lay on the lawn at night, clover wrinkling under me, the wise stars bedding over me, my mother's window a funnel of yellow heat running out, my father's window, half shut, an eye where sleepers pass, and the boards of the house were smooth and white as wax and probably a million leaves sailed on their strange stalks as the crickets ticked together and I, in my brand new body, which was not a woman's yet, told the stars my questions and thought God could really see the heat and the painted light, elbows, knees, dreams, goodnight.

There is so much pain in the world. What does it mean to have to suffer so much if our lives are nothing more than the blink of an eye when measured against eternity?

A blink of the eye in itself is nothing. But the eye that blinks, that is something. A span of life is nothing. But the man who lives that span, he is something. He can fill that tiny span with meaning, so its quality is immeasurable though its quantity may be insignificant. A man must work to fill his life with meaning, meaning is not automatically given to life. — Chaim Potok, The Chosen

We don't sell insurance by accident.

In the strictest sense of the word, we don't sell insurance at all. Our method is quite simple, yet effective. After discussion with you about your needs, we buy the correct insurance from one of the many reputable companies we represent. We buy it carefully and prudently, as though we were buying it for ourselves.

Ours is a very personal business. Can we be of service to you?

...THANK YOU

ELECTRICAL

SAYS BLOW IT OUT YOUR BUNGHOLE!

The strength of Fiberglas has helped stretch the arrow flight record nearly 1 mile. How much stronger would it make your product?

In 3,000 years, the best anybody could do with a wooden footbow was to send an arrow the length of about five football fields.

Then, along came bows made with Fiberglas*. Much stronger. With more whip. In 1970, Harry Drake cocked one back, and launched an arrow the length of some nineteen football fields. Nearly a mile farther!

Fiberglas reinforcement, added to plastic, can be engineered into a materials "system" with almost any desired characteristic.

Products like boat hulls and bathtubs benefit from the same strength that improved the footbow. Other products like home appliances and underground tanks are better because they're more resistant to corrosion, more moldable, more durable, lighter, or less expensive.

Would a Fiberglas materials system make your product better? We'll help you find out. Write: E. G. Meeks, Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., Fiberglas Tower, Toledo, Ohio 43659.

Whew!

Andover Gift House So now I get to write a paragraph to end this great published monument to us. That is, the Class of 1978. I could go on with drool about what went into this book and what didn't; who was responsible for it and who wasn't. But what went into it is apparent. And those responsible for it know who they are. Besides, I want to use this page for my own farewells. So I will forgo all that stuff save for one statement: Peter Williams is not to be held responsible for any mistakes in this book. We made him commit them.

I am getting strangely sentimental as I write this. I considered this class as complete as any other I've seen. There were those who were a real compliment to this class. There were others who sucked, but those kind are needed for a community. And we made a damned viable community. I wish to thank and wish well everybody I knew here. I cannot name you all but believe me, I value each of you incredibly. So Christ, I hope I run into the lot of you as time goes by. Chances are I will. Please enjoy the book; those responsible for it worked very hard.
